In art, meanings acquired from perception are concentrated in visual expression, and style represents "an interpretation, an optional way of depicting the world." The unfinished character of modern painting, as Merleau-Ponty describes it, is not some kind of a turn from objective observation and depiction of the reality to a more subjective vision, but is rather a testimony to a "paradoxical logic of all expression."

Visual art is a complex stimulus. Drawing on extant theory that the interplay of affect and cognition evoked by a stimulus drives evaluations, we develop a generalizable model for the perception and evaluation of visual art. In three stages, we develop scaled measurements for the affective and cognitive components involved in the perception of visual art and present a structural
