A Nice Guy traditionally finds himself in the Friend Zone in one of two ways: either he asks someone out and gets the Let's Just Be Friends speech or else he never asks her out in the first place. Either way, he strikes up a friendship with her instead - a friendship that is, at it's core, predicated on her eventually realizing what a great guy he his, how he has all between a nice guy and real man. As a broad guide, much of the difference between a nice guy and a real man comes down to confidence and how that confidence expresses itself in both physical and psychological terms. There is something very attractive about someone who is self-assured enough to be unconcerned with trivialities.
