Rosie Morgan has lived and worked in Cornwall UK, the setting for 'The Camelot Inheritance' series, for most of her life. She's had the privilege to teach some wonderful children in tiny, two-class, village schools (complete with an outdoor toilet and complementary spiders). However she's also taught in larger schools - with spider-free facilities.

Merlin adds a false extension to the story: when Bruta was on his deathbed, he asked to be taken deep into the forest. There, with the last of his strength, he thrust his sword into a rock. If his lineage was ever questioned, this would form a test, for only a true King of Camelot could pull the weapon free.
