The Civil War Tearing Sports Illustrated Apart

After the start of the war, the South was cut off from Northern publications, just as it was from an array of other commodities. To fill this void, and to offer a Southern perspective on the war, the Richmond publishing firm of Ayers and Wade established the Southern Illustrated News in 1862. Though it managed to last for two years, it was in fact barely illustrated, featuring only one or two illustrations an issue, and it was perpetually plagued by a shortage of paper, ink, presses, and ...
