Unfortunately, the research showed that they had just cut down the oldest tree in the world. Known as "Prometheus," the tree showed an age of 4,862 years. It was approximately 66 years older than Methuselah. But Methuselah was able to retain the title of the oldest tree on earth because Prometheus was now no more.

Meet The Methuselah Tree, The Oldest Tree In The World

In general, a tree is probably around 8-15 years old for every 1 ft (0.30 m) of trunk diameter. For instance, if the circumference of a tree is 6 ft (1.8 m) around, it's probably at least 50 years old if it's a hardwood. For example, oak, ash, beech, and sycamore trees grow about 1/2 to 3/4 in (1.3 to 1.9 cm) in circumference per year.
